Mindset of a Good Persuader
Course Overview

Persuasion and arguing controversial issues can be very stimulating, challenging, and constructive. Because interest and enjoyment is so high in such situations, we could conclude that there are few more rewarding ways of interacting with people. Contrasted with these pleasant experiences are encounters which we would like to forget. All of us have probably participated in arguments which resulted in hurt feelings, anger, frustration, confusion, embarrassment, and even damaged or broken relationships. Such experiences may have led us to conclude that arguing is a destructive form of communication which should be avoided. Some people seem to go to almost any length to avoid a potential argument.
Learning Objectives:
Upon completion of this module, participants will be able to:

Activity:
Pass out one card to each participant instructing them not to look at their own cards. Explain that they have all been invited to the once-in-a-lifetime WVDOH company picnic and each one of them will have the opportunity to speak with the “Big Dog” to attempt to persuade him/her to schedule a meeting so as to sell him/her on the idea of a big project. The “Big Dog” will be identified as the “Ace” card but this person will not know he/she has the Ace. There will also be some middle management (Kings, Queens, Jacks, and tens) who has direct access to the “Big Dog” on a daily basis so scheduling a meeting with him/her would be as effective as the one with the “Ace”. The point is to use the power of persuasion to get as many meetings as possible with middle and upper management.

Debrief:
- “How many meetings were you able to schedule?”
- “For those on the low end of the totem pole, how persuasive were you able to be? Did you often feel you were overlooked?”
- “Would it have changed the way you approached upper management if you’d known where you were on the totem pole initially?”
- “Is the amount of influence related to the amount of power or status within an organization?”

State:
As a leader you need to remember power corrupts persuasion and using your rank does not create buy in but makes a fearful follower.

Simply through ordinary talk, when you cause others to alter a belief, change an emotion, or act differently, you’ve persuaded them. Persuasion involves you, other people, and change. SESSION: What is Your Persuasion Style?

Method | CONTENT/NARRATIVE

Activity: Personal Persuasion Style Assessment
Discuss the different Styles:

Driver:
- Individual is high volume and announces their own perspective without adjustments for the audience is usually seemed as demanding.
- Over bearing and one dimensional
- With enough authority this person could cause havoc in the office. But if they convey self-awareness and dedication to the orgs mission they can effectively be persuasive.

Commander:
- The individual is low volume and still speaking from their own perspective of a quiet confidence and credibility.
- This person gives few signals, keeps his/her own counsel, and put a premium on maintaining as much decision control as possible.

Promoter:
- This individual has a more outgoing and gregarious personality,
- so they have a gift for gaining and maintaining a wide variety of relationships, and
- They are comfortable moving on the larger social stage of organizations and interest groups

Chess Player:
- Prefers to operate the levers of interests, relationships, and politics in more intimate settings.
- They are strategic and quietly managing encounters behind the scenes.
- They have a low key personality combined with a concern for what other people are thinking. Which can lead an inexperienced person to be too accommodating and passive?
- They are less extroverted that the Promoter but has the same interest on what makes people tick.

Advocate:

☐ Slide 4
☐ Personal Style Assessment
- This personal style is a balance of both Self Oriented and Other oriented perspectives.
- This person will use the full range of tools to get their point across.
- They strive for balance and persistence without shouting and very mindful of the audience without losing perspective.

Debrief: Where you surprised with your outcome? Did you assume you were something else or did you unlock something here about yourself?

State: This is for your benefit. To know your style helps identify the style of others. Ok, now let’s look at the two components of a message.
COURSE TITLE: Persuasion: Influencing Others for Effective Change

SESSION: The Source of the Message

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Method</th>
<th>CONTENT/NARRATIVE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| State When you are trying to persuade someone there are three factors to consider before doing so. The first is persuading someone using Credibility by appealing to someone using character. If you are respectful and honest, people will be more likely to follow you because of your character. Your character convinces the follower that you are someone who is worth listening to for advice. The second is persuading by appealing to the other persons emotions. For example, when a politician wants to gain support for the bill, all they would have to say is, “it’s for the children!” Finally, appealing to someone’s intellect with logic and facts. But does everyone react on a rational level? The mental state of the receiver is very important when trying to influence. Is he/she willing to or able to think about what you’re saying? How elaborate your message will determine what type of receiver you’re delivering to. Make sure you consider all the outcomes of what you are trying to influence the other person. Have all the facts and sound reasoning to back up your statement or solution.
Flipchart Activity: Christmas Tree
Directions: Draw a plain Christmas tree and then add on ornaments while discussing the following:
State: Think of your persuasive message as a Christmas tree – if your tree is not decorated with many and various decorations / logic, reasoning, evidence, etc. then you won’t be able to appeal to the central route of persuasion. You can add many lights (evidence) and tinsel (sound reasoning) and ornaments (logic) to your tree and you’ll give the person you want to influence more to think about. The more they think about it, the more likely that they will want to change their behavior if they’ve accepted your arguments as valuable.
Transitional: The second component of the message is the receiver. Let’s look at a few things to consider when delivering your message. |

SESSION: The Receiver of the Message

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

<th>CONTENT/NARRATIVE</th>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>State</td>
<td>Is the receiver understanding your message? Did you think about when and where you are presenting this information? If you want a raise from your boss when is the best time to approach him/her with the question? Is it after his/her meeting with their boss reprimanding the unit for not meeting deadlines or is it when the boss has down time and you notice they're in a good mood and praised you for a job well done? Placement is very important how and when you make your statement can determine if that person will listen.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Make your message available multiple times and different ways to stick out in their minds because he will more likely to accept it. Think about the ads on TV. They are placed most likely when the audience they are targeting will be watching and it’s played several times and they always have contrast (something that makes it stands out) in them to stick out in your mind. We tend to respond to contrast in a way that grabs us and makes us receive the message.

Activity: Presenting and making it stick out

- Give the students a topic and one person must leave the room and the other one stays in.
- Give them 5 mins to make their case to present to the other person who will be doing everything in their power not to pay attention.
- The one presenting the case must make something sticks out in their minds to grab their attention and persuade them to hear what they are saying.

Debrief:

“The team member that did the talking, did you feel empowered speaking to your partner? Why or why not? Did you feel as if you were heard? How did that make you feel?” “what did you use to make your message stick and grab their attention? How successful where you?”

State The receiver is in one of the two states of receiving your message Low or High WATT. WATT is defined as the Willingness and ability to think? Why should they care? Let’s understand the differences. between a Low/HighWATT person.
CONTENT/NARRATIVE

State These 6 cues of influence called CLARCCS Cues. They tend to be consistent by occupation, sex, region, personality, religion, education and ethnicity. They work! LowWATT — usually skims the surface of ideas, and not thinking carefully enough. They use the 6 CLARCCS cues here to determine their decision.

Comparison:
- When others are doing it, we should, too. When we aren’t thinking carefully we resort to using the behavior of others to guide what we think we should do. We compare our behavior to the standard of what everyone is doing.

Liking:
- When like the source, we do what they ask of us. For example a car salesman sells a high number of vehicles every month. He takes the time to write a hand written note to each of his customers whether they buy a car or not saying I like you, Salesman’s Name. Nothing more.

Authority:
- When the source is an authority, we can believe it. Sometimes we feel a sense of duty or obligation to people in positions of authority. Things like job titles, uniforms, and even the material accessories can lend an air to authority and will persuade us to accept what people say.

Reciprocity:
- Normally we tend to return favors, payback debts, and treat others the way we want to be treated. When someone gives us something, we should give something back which is because we’re uncomfortable with feeling indebted to them.

Commitment/Consistency:
- When we take a stand, we should be consistent. We have a deep desire to be consistent so once we have committed to something we are more inclined to follow through with it.

Scarcity:
- When it’s rare, it’s good (we want it!). We are attracted to something more if there is a limited amount or when we stand to lose the opportunity to acquire them on favorable terms.

Activity: Ad Video
Show the video.

Debrief:
- What were they persuading you to do?
- What was effective about the ad?
- Who was their target audience?

State: Now that we have seen how low watt person likes when their messages are delivered let’s look at what the highWATT person prefers.
COURSE TITLE: Persuasion: Influencing Others for Effective Change

A high watt individual is a person who thinks very carefully with a lot of effort. This person’s thought process is active, creative and alert. For example: if a high watt individual was going to buy a car. That person would carefully research the top five they like and make sure they test drive the car not just once but several times. After that they will visit several places to negotiate a price before settling down on purchasing one.
Can argument be positive? How? Argument is about the differences of opinion on issues, not about making the other person feel bad about themselves just because you have run out of the argument. We tend to verbally attack someone when we run out of things to say but when you’re arguing about a position you must focus on the task at hand instead of the other person.
The benefits of having strong arguments show what position we hold, allow others to present their point of view, helps us understand new views and doesn’t attack others. Benefits of Arguing also stimulates curiosity, increases learning, reduces ego centric thinking, improves social perspective taking, stimulates creativity, and enhances quality of decision making. |

Activity: Persuasion Editorials
Distribute the editorial activity, making sure that you use at least 2 to three editorials. Each table of trainees will have one of the editorials to read and analyze. Choose one of the editorials and have a group that analyze and share their answers. If you have time you can do more.
Debrief:
- If you can read an editorial and analyze it, you are essentially analyzing the writer’s argument. He is trying to persuade you to come to his side of the issue. By doing this occasionally, you will sharpen you analytical skills, which will lead to improved argumentative skills.

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>State</td>
<td>Before presenting your information make sure you plan and do research to reach the desired goal. In order to make your case you must first grab:</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Attention

To get someone to listen to your argument, you need to get their attention. You have about five seconds when talking to someone to engage their attention before they will lose focus. Keep it Simple Stupid (KISS method) Use emotion to demonstrate your position whatever emotion conveys the strength of your position. Just remember it’s about receiver not the source.

Need

You can lose their attention as quickly as you have it if the other person doesn’t see the need to continue listening. To keep the other person’s attention, you have to be familiar with what is important to them. What do they want? What do they value? Why should they care about your side of the argument? Once you can answer these questions, you are ready to ‘hook’ the listener by focusing on what they care about.

Satisfaction

In this step, you describe to the listener how your position will meet the need you addressed in the previous step. Will your solution solve their problem? Will it prevent them from having to deal with additional problems? In other words, what benefits will the listener receive if they are persuaded by your argument? Or what negative consequences will they avoid? Avoid verbal aggression such as character attacks, insults, etc...

Visualization

Visualization means that you can create a picture for the listener of what the situation will look like once they have been persuaded to accept your position or agree to your decision. Help them do this by describing what the world will be like ‘after’ they agree with you. For example, use language like: Imagine what it will be like when you no longer have to… Can you see how this would reduce your work load (solve your problem; increase your profits, etc.) Picture yourself leaving work on time once we make this change (or some other way their life will improve once they agree with you)

Action

Once you sense that you are approaching agreement, you need to cement it by suggesting the next step or action that will put your solution in motion. Don’t wait – act as soon as you can so that the other person is not left stewing and thinking things over more (and perhaps changing their mind).

Now that you know how to make your case let’s put it to use.

Activity: Please Come Join Us!

Objective: Participants are encouraged to use on the six rules of influence and discover the efficiency of each technique.

Directions:

- Divide the group into two groups one on either end of the room and have one person who acts independently sitting in between the group.
- Each team will be given 10 mins to make a case using at least three of the six rules to persuade the independent person to join their team.
- One representative will present their case to the person to join their team.

Debrief:

- Which rule worked better? And Why?
- How easy was it to agree on the decision?
- What rules did you use in your group to influence your point of view?
- To the independent person: What about their presentation influenced you to join their team.
COURSE TITLE: Persuasion: Influencing Others for Effective Change
SESSION: Modeling and Developing Rapport

Mirror the Persons Physiology:
- Mirroring others is natural and we often do it subconsciously and automatically when we feel a sense of rapport with the other person. By mirroring your sending signals that you’re on their side which paves a path to persuasion.
- Example: if the other person leans forward you lean forward, or if they cross their knee do the same.

Matching a person’s Voice:
- Match the tone of the other person’s voice for example: if they speak slowly, slower your rate of speaking. You will know you are being effective if the other person begins to match your voice.

Matching a Persons Breathing:
- This is another way you can show the other person that you are in agreement with the other person and can help you build a deeper rapport.

Matching the way a person deals with information:
- Ask yourself do they want to take information in one detail at a time or do they approach it from the big picture perspective. If the person is detailed or big picture oriented make sure you convey the information to how they understand it.

Matching Common Experiences:
- This is what we do when we first meet someone. Finding that common ground will help in building the rapport. Whether its experiences, interest or even a common associate it will aid in rapport building and give them the perception of being sincere.

Activity : Role Play Mirroring Skit “Not yet designed”

Option 1: Trainer is alone – have the student’s pair up and talk amongst them or ask for a volunteer.

Option 2: If there are two trainers do the skit with each other.
COURSE TITLE: Persuasion: Influencing Others for Effective Change

SESSION: Using Persuasion Successfully

- State: You want to avoid putting others on the defensive so:
  - Concentrate on what the problem is and how it can be solved rather than who is at fault.
  - Respond instead of react to a communication problem or an emotional situation.
  - State the benefits or advantages of an action instead of just doing it because you have been ordered to.
  - Refrain from verbal attacks on the persons character, judging and concentrate on the problem that resulted.

Using persuasion efficiently and successfully can make a big difference when presenting your next project or wanting a raise.

SESSION: Mindset of a Good Persuader

- State: To be a good persuader you must have confidence, honesty and sincerity in what you are saying to influence the other person. You must have all the information, facts, and stats to make your case. Also to be confident you must believe in yourself because if not how do you expect anyone else to. Act as expected of a leader and be patient.

One of the ways to be proactive is you must exhibit consistency. If you say you’re going to do something do it because if you don’t the others will not count on you to do anything. You should also show that you want to solve problems instead of dwelling on them. If there is a process find ways to do it more efficiently. Basically don’t wait to do something just do it.

Finally in order to be a good persuader you must always have a positive outlook on everything. In state government it’s very difficult to do that at times but when it comes to being positive focus on things we can control vs. what we can’t control. You must have enthusiasm not only what you say but in your actions as well. This is where non-verbals come into play watch your facial expressions and gestures when persuading others.
Activity:

Prepare participants for the following activity:

1. Display a $100 bill. Pass the bill around so participants can verify that it is the genuine article.
2. Individually come up with the best way to spend the money.
3. Persuade your group
4. Each group will present the idea to me as a judge

Debrief:

1. Who originally proposed the idea that ended up as the winning idea? How much of the credit goes to this person? How much of the credit goes to her team members?
2. How critical is it to be flexible with your idea in order to make it more appealing?
3. What strategies did you come up with for making your 30-second presentation?
4. Did you apply anything that you learned today?
5. How would knowing your receiver state of mind help?
6. What methods should you use for a highWATT/LowWATT?
7. Is persuasion important in the workplace?

Review:

- Option 1 – Review ball
- Option 2 – Just discuss and ask questions
